

Career Research: Working with Children

Directions: Use the following sites to help you to find information. Your answers should be written in complete sentences and not copy and pasted from websites.

BLS Career One Stop <https://www.onetonline.org/>

Research Questions

1. Career Title:

What is the name of the career?

The name of this career is a Child Development specialist.

2. What They Do:

Describe the job. What does someone in this career do when working with children?

Someone in this career is in charge of focusing on how children learn. They spend their time observing children at home, school, and in social situations. They may devise some activities for children to see how they may respond to solving a problem, dealing with challenges, and how they attend tasks. They will observe children in social situations to see how well they communicate and engage with others.

3. Education and Training:

What education, certification, or training is required for this career? What universities and colleges in California are available for training and education.

Child development specialists should have a minimum of a bachelor's degree in a field related to child development. A university that is available in California is Grand Canyon University.

4. Skills Needed:

What skills are important for someone working in this career? (Examples: communication, patience, leadership)

The most important skills for someone working in this career are creativity, patience, understanding, empathy, communication, organization, and flexibility. To become a child development specialist these skills are important because the main point of this job is observing children and when observing children you need a lot of patience and communication. I think these are the most important parts of becoming a child development specialist.

5. Work Setting:

Where does this person usually work? (school, daycare, community center, home, etc.)

They usually work in many different locations such as preschools, hospitals, community centers, etc.

6. Why Child Development is Important:

Explain how knowledge of child development helps someone be successful in this career.

Knowledge of child development helps someone be successful in this career because the whole point of this career is to understand how children learn and react to diverse situations so understanding the knowledge of child development is necessary. Other than it being necessary it can help you understand children more and understand the reason for why they did what they did.

7. Salary or Pay Range:

What is the typical salary or hourly pay?

The typical salary for a child development specialist is 60,903 per year. Which would be 30.45 per hour.

8. Interesting Facts:

3 interesting facts you learned about this career.

3 interesting facts I learned about this career was about what they study and they study about things such as human development, child development, developmental disorders, behavioral disorders, child psychology, family psychology, anatomy and physiology, brain development and neuroscience, child neglect and abuse, intervention and treatment strategies, autism spectrum disorder, and social and emotional learning. Another fact I learned was that they also work in many different locations. The last fact I found interesting was how they find treatment plans to help children, their families and teachers.

9. Works cited

<https://www.indeed.com/career/child-development-specialist/salaries/CA>

<https://www.gcu.edu/blog/teaching-school-administration/what-child-development-specialist>